The Concerted Action on Risk Assessment for Contaminated Sites (CARACAS) was set up in order to address the issues relating to contaminated land risk assessment in Europe. It was initiated by the German Federal Ministry for the Environment, coordinated by the Federal Environmental Agency and brings together the combined knowledge of academics and government experts from 16 European countries.

These books are one of the major outputs from this scientific partnership and summarise the conclusions and recommendations drawn by CARACAS scientists for various practical, policy and research areas related to risk assessment of contaminated land.
